4.1 PTFE

4.1.1 Product, properties, uses and processing technology

Products

Polytetrafluoroethylene (PTFE) is formed by The polymerization of tetrafluoroethylene (TFE). It is a fully fluorinated polymer available in various unmodified and modified grades. It is a fluorocarbon solid, as it is a high-molecular-weight compound consisting wholly of carbon and fluorine.

PTFE is sold in a granular or powder form, and then is either melted down and extruded or compression-molded into components or is combined with water or other solvent and sprayed on to a substrate, such as metal or fabric.

PTFE can be generally categorized into

- granular PTFE
- fine powder PTFE
- PTFE aqueous dispersions
- PTFE micropowder
- Modified PTFE

Granular PTFE resins are produced by polymerizing tetrafluoroethylene alone or with a trace of comonomers with initiator and sometimes in the presence of an alkaline buffer in aqueous suspension medium.

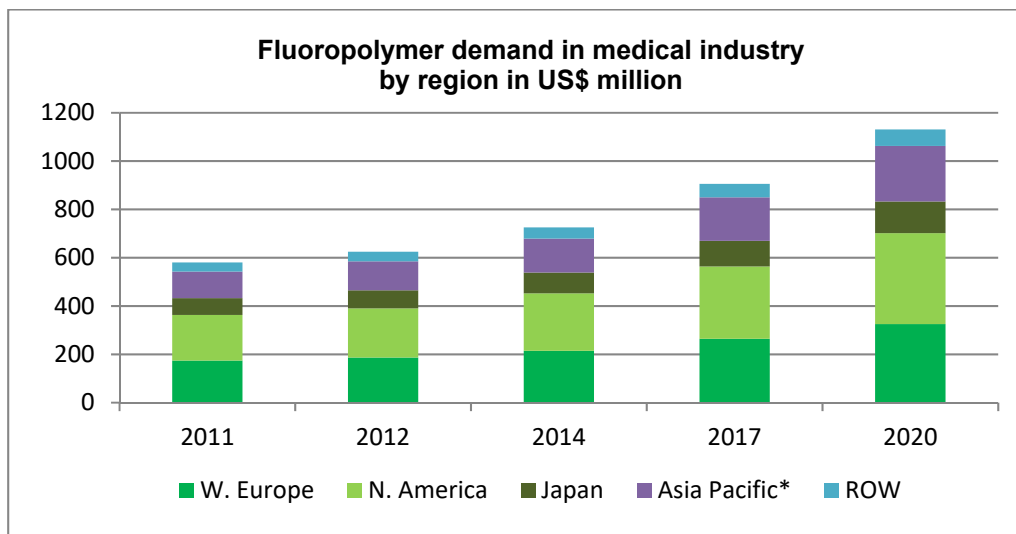

Fine powder PTFE is produced by polymerization of TFE in an aqueous medium in the presence of an initiator and surfactant.
